Trust is a cornerstone for all forms of human exchange. Recent research from several disciplines – evolutionary psychology, neuroscience, anthropology, evolutionary game theory and behavioral economics – has given fresh insight into the role of trust in social and economic exchange. This series will have launched discussion about the implications of this research on the design of digital social exchange platforms such as eBay and building peer governance platforms.